KITTY

by W. Somerset Maugham

Her happiness, sometimes almost more than she could bear, renewed her beauty. Just before she married, beginning to lose her freshness, she had looked tired and drawn. The unchangeable said that she was going off. But there is all the difference between a girl of twenty-five and a married woman of that age. She was like a rose that is beginning to turn yellow at the edge of the petal, and suddenly she was a rose in full bloom. Her sherry gave a more significant expression to her skin that featured which had always been her greatest prosperity and most anxiety, care was dashing; it could not be compared to the flush or it is the flush; it is in the rise and fall of the flush, in that moment when all the blood rises in the blush, in that moment when all the blood rises in the blush,
